

The wave function of the valence electron of a neutral atom such as Na is found by solving the “frozen core” HF equation, where the core is the closed-shell  $\text{Na}^+$  ion.

Can the HF potential for a neutral atom such as Ne support a valence bound state? Explain your answer.