

112 Beginning Logic

This course is intended for freshmen in arts and letters. The course has special relevance to students in English, philosophy, liberal studies, pre-law, etc.

People who liked diagramming sentences in school rise to the challenge of analyzing arguments in a formal way. Some students signed up just to try something a little different, different from calculus.