CONWAY HALL
Royal Waterloo House
51-55 Waterloo Road, London SE1 8TX

About

While we may recognize the Royal Waterloo House from its brief cameo in the 2009 Sherlock Holmes film, this building is deep seated in a history that far exceeds its most recent transformation into Conway Hall. The original Royal Waterloo House was erected in 1823 as the Royal Universal Infirmary for Children, used in tandem to care for patients and in medical instruction. Rebuilt in 1903-1905, the current Lombardic Renaissance-style red brick structure features a graceful three-tiered terra-cotta loggia displaying the characterful lettering of the hospital and a unique corner turret bearing the Royal Arms.

English Heritage lists Royal Waterloo House as a Grade II building, meaning it has been placed on the Statutory List of Buildings of Special Architectural or Historic Interest, warranting every effort to preserve it.

Amenities

The hall houses a total of 43 flats, with 130 beds reserved for the University of Notre Dame London Undergraduate Study Abroad Program, 22 for the Law Program, and 119 beds for lease.

A flat houses between 2 to 12 individuals and is fully furnished with kitchen, living room, and bedroom furniture. Flat kitchens are fully equipped and fitted out with all the necessities required for preparing and serving meals and a set of linen and towel per bed.

Additional amenities include 24 hour security, laundry facilities, a courtyard area, and a Student Activities Centre with dual high definition televisions and full kitchen.

Location

Located across the street from the Waterloo Train Station and a five minute walking distance from the Thames, Conway Hall is a prime location to witness the eclectic hubbub of London. The residence hall is about a twenty minute walk from the Notre Dame London Center.
