In memory of

Win Jordan
Contents

List of Figures and Tables ix
Acknowledgments xiii

Introduction 1

RACE AND ETHNICITY

1 The Illogic of American Racial Categories 15
2 Mapping Race: Multiracial People and Racial Category Construction in the United States and Britain 33
3 What’s Critical about White Studies 53
4 Race and Nation, Identity and Power: Thinking Comparatively about Ethnic Systems 85
5 From the Black Atlantic to the Racial Pacific: Rethinking Racial Hierarchy in Colonial and Postcolonial Contexts 119
6 The Return of Scientific Racism? DNA Ancestry Testing, Race, and the New Eugenics Movement 142

© 2015 UNIVERSITY OF NOTRE DAME
Contents

MIXED RACE

7  What Must I Be? Asian Americans and the Question of Multiethnic Identity  177
8  The Power of Blackness: Mixed-Race Leaders and the Monoracial Ideal  210
9  Pacific Islander Americans and Multiethnicity: A Vision of America’s Future?  235
10 Carving Out a Middle Ground: Making Race in Hawai`i with Jeffrey Moniz  261
11 Does Multiraciality Lighten? Me-Too Ethnicity and the Whiteness Trap  291
12 It’s Not That Simple: Multiraciality, Models, and Social Hierarchy with Ingrid Dineen-Wimberly  308
13 Obama Nation? Race, Multiraciality, and American Identity  330

Suggested Reading  376
Index  388
Figures and Tables

FIGURES

1.1. Walter White and Poppy Cannon. Courtesy of Ebony magazine. 22

8.3. A view of W. E. B. Du Bois darkened for the cover of an important biography of the great man. Portrait by Addison N. Scurlock. Courtesy of the National Portrait Gallery, Smithsonian Institution. 221

8.4. Jean Toomer, herald of the Harlem Renaissance, ca. 1934. From the Marjorie Toomer Collection. Copyright Estate of Marjorie Content. Courtesy of the National Portrait Gallery, Smithsonian Institution. 222

© 2015 UNIVERSITY OF NOTRE DAME
8.5. Abolitionist Frederick Douglass. Photo by Mathew Brady Studio. Courtesy of Ronald L. Harris. 229

10.1. Conceptualizing Midaltern Space 273

10.2. Local Identity Models 280

10.3. Local Identity Model Illustrating the Fluidity of an Individual’s Identity 282

12.3. Belle da Costa Greene. Courtesy of the Morgan Library. 320

12.5. Paramount chief John Ross of the Cherokee Nation. Courtesy of the J. B. Milan Collection, Oklahoma Historical Society Research Division. 323

13.2. Novelist Charles W. Chesnutt. Courtesy of the Cleveland Public Library. 338

13.3. Vice President Charles Curtis. Courtesy of the Kansas State Historical Society. 339

<table>
<thead>
<tr>
<th>TABLES</th>
</tr>
</thead>
<tbody>
<tr>
<td>6.1. Racial Types in Pseudoscience</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>9.1. Ancestry</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>9.2. Identity Choices of People Who Report Multiple Ancestries</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>10.1. Types of Midaltern Expressions in Hawai’i and Racialized Identity by Worldview</td>
</tr>
</tbody>
</table>
Acknowledgments

As this manuscript goes to press, I find I owe debts of gratitude beyond my capacity to repay to two people. Patrick Miller has been a fellow traveler on many, many adventures over the years. He has never failed to retain his good humor while doing his best to restrain some of my rhetorical excesses. Reginald Daniel's name appears often in the notes to the pages that follow, but he deserves special mention, for he has been a boon companion and is the single person to whom my thinking about race owes the greatest debt.

At the University of Notre Dame Press, Chuck Van Hof showed enthusiasm for the project from the start. He and his colleagues Stephen Little, Rebecca DeBoer, and Sheila Berg have done a more than professional job of editing. I am grateful for both. Among those he recruited to help me make this book better are Roger Daniels, the dean of American immigration historians, and Maria Diedrich, the foremost African Americanist in Europe. Each encouraged my work and helped me make key improvements to the manuscript.

I would not have come to many of the understandings that appear in these pages were it not for three institutions where I have done time. The people at Garfield High School in Seattle and the Central District around it nurtured me as a youth and taught me more about the way race works in America than any other single source. The people of Brigham Young University–Hawai‘i and the towns of Laʻie, Kahuku, and Kaneʻohe helped me understand that identities are not only constructed, but complex and variable. The University of California, Santa Barbara, gave me a place to work, space to pursue my ideas, and colleagues to encourage me. I am especially grateful to librarians at these institutions, among them Riley Moffett, Barbara Lansdon, Sherri Barnes, and Gary Colmenar.

DeAundra Jenkins-Holder of Fisk University went far out of her way to take a photo of the statue of W. E. B. Du Bois that stands on her campus. Special thanks are due to Francisco Beltran and Laura Hooton, whose generous, skillful, and persistent research on another project freed me to complete this one.

For the past couple of decades I have enjoyed the company of the Hui—an endless stream of brilliant students who have taught me much and who never failed to provide entertainment as they went about their own projects. My wife, Anna Lucky Louise Spickard, has been a constant solace and source of intellectual engagement. My other debts are marked in the notes. By the time you reach the end of the book, you will likely understand why it is dedicated to Winthrop Jordan.