

HANS URS VON BALTHASAR
and the Critical Appropriation of Russian Religious Thought

HANS URS
VON BALTHASAR
and the Critical Appropriation of Russian Religious Thought

JENNIFER NEWSOME MARTIN

University of Notre Dame Press
Notre Dame, Indiana

© 2015 UNIVERSITY OF NOTRE DAME

Copyright © 2015 by the University of Notre Dame
Notre Dame, Indiana 46556
undpress.nd.edu

All Rights Reserved

Manufactured in the United States of America

The Press gratefully acknowledges the support of the Institute for Scholarship in the Liberal Arts, University of Notre Dame, in the publication of this book.

Library of Congress Cataloging-in-Publication Data

Martin, Jennifer Newsome.

Hans Urs von Balthasar and the critical appropriation of Russian religious thought / Jennifer Newsome Martin.

pages cm

Includes bibliographical references and index.

ISBN 978-0-268-03536-5 (pbk. : alk. paper)

ISBN 0-268-03536-9 (pbk. : alk. paper)

1. Balthasar, Hans Urs von, 1905–1988.
2. Philosophy, Russian—20th century. I. Title.

BX4705.B163M37 2015

230'.2092—dc23

2015031758

∞ The paper in this book meets the guidelines for permanence and durability of the Committee on Production Guidelines for Book Longevity of the Council on Library Resources.

© 2015 UNIVERSITY OF NOTRE DAME

To Jay, sine qua non,

and to the eternal memory of Douglas Michael Shippy (1978–2002),
our dearest and most loyal friend.

CONTENTS

	Acknowledgments	ix
CHAPTER 1	“Der Seelen wunderliches Bergwerk”: On the Subterranean and the Speculative	1
CHAPTER 2	“Denn da ist keine Stelle, die dich nicht sieht”: Theological and Quasi-Theological Aesthetics	39
CHAPTER 3	“Du Dunkelheit, aus der ich stamme”: Ontology, Evil, and Myth at the Root	79
CHAPTER 4	“Grün wirklicher Grüne, wirklicher Sonnenschein, wirklicher Wald”: Anthropological Eschata and the Logic of Resurrection	117
CHAPTER 5	“Denn Armut ist ein großer Glanz aus Innen”: The Theocentric Horizon	160
	Conclusion	198
	Notes	208
	Selected Bibliography	280
	Index	291

ACKNOWLEDGMENTS

I owe a great debt of gratitude first to my doctoral advisor and friend Cyril O'Regan, for demonstrating an extraordinary example of the elegance and artfulness of the theological craft, and for practicing it in good faith rigorously, responsibly, and without affectation. Thank you, Cyril, for reading drafts of this work with equal measures of swiftness, generosity, and practical wisdom, and for taking me as and holding me to my best self. Though he would certainly protest the characterization, his genius and saintliness are supreme manifestations of a life of faith, and proof that such a life is indeed possible.

I am also grateful to Lawrence Cunningham for being a consistently supportive and encouraging presence from the time I came to the University of Notre Dame in 2005. Your scholarship, teaching, and friendship model a rare balance of deep erudition, great generosity, and genuine humility. I am especially grateful for your assistance in submitting this manuscript for publication at the University of Notre Dame Press. Thank you as well to John Betz for kindly serving as a reader of this text in its nascent form as a dissertation, and especially for the searching questions about the status of Schelling's contribution, which I am still thinking about how best to answer.

I wish also to thank the many other kind and generous people associated with the theology department at the University of Notre Dame who have assisted and encouraged me throughout, especially Mary Catherine Hilkert, who has mentored and advocated for me in many ways, and Robin Darling Young, who introduced me to Pavel Florensky over scotch in the summer of 2006 and started my long captivation with the Russians. A special thank you to my fellow classmates at Notre Dame, especially to Todd Walatka, whose willingness to read even the least-developed versions of my drafts improved the final work tremendously. Thanks also to Michael Altenburger for patiently checking the proofs.

To my colleagues in the Program of Liberal Studies, especially Gretchen Reydams-Schils, Julia Marvin, Pierpaolo Polzonetti, Joseph Rosenberg, Tom Stapleford, and Henry Weinfield: thank you for welcoming me enthusiastically into this rich and close-knit group of scholars and friends. Abundant thanks are also owed to the extended community of Balthasar scholars, especially Tony Scigliano, whose excellent scholarship, remarkable personal graciousness, and generous friendship humble and hearten me.

At the University of Notre Dame Press, I am indebted to the editorial board as well as the readers of this manuscript, who provided enormously intelligent, detailed, and serious engagement with the text in their written reports. The book is much improved because of your careful attention and judicious suggestions. Thank you particularly to acquisitions editors Charles Van Hof and Stephen Little for your efforts in bringing this book to publication. I am grateful for the tireless work of Wendy McMillen, Susan Berger, and Rebecca DeBoer, and the many other supremely helpful people at the University of Notre Dame Press. I wish also to thank the Institute for Scholarship in the Liberal Arts for generously providing a grant for indexing. The book is also much improved due to the decisive and elegant work of copy editor Kellie Hultgren, to whom I remain grateful. Whatever infelicities, errors, or omissions that might inadvertently remain are my own.

I am thankful to my parents, stepparents, and parents-in-law, whose unfailing love is a testament to the unspeakable gratuity of the grace of God. Thanks especially to my beautiful children, James, John Moses, and Mary Frances Clare, whose ever-present affections and interruptions prevent me from ever taking myself too seriously. Above all, I am indebted to my friend and husband, Jay Martin, for reading, editing, and offering extraordinarily profitable criticisms to this manuscript, and especially for first introducing me to Balthasar's theology so many years ago. Far more, I am immensely grateful for your infinite patience, honesty, sense of humor, and profoundly self-giving—even kenotic—love, in the rather unglamorous vicissitudes of the daily life of two distracted academics with three small children. Thank you for being a true partner in scholarship, parenthood, friendship, and marriage.